Plaintiff-Appellant,

v

STATE FARM MUTUAL AUTOMOBILE
INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 195938
Oakland Circuit Court
LC No. 94-DA6199-AV

Defendant-Appellee.

Before: Jansen, P.J., and Doctoroff and Gage, JJ.

GAGE, J.

This case is before this Court on remand from our Supreme Court for consideration as on leave granted. Professional Rehabilitation Assoc'n v State Farm Mut Auto Ins Co, 452 Mich 857; 550 NW2d 794 (1996). Plaintiff appeals an order issued by the circuit court that affirmed a district court order granting summary disposition to defendant. We reverse.

Defendant's insured, Clifford Lay, was injured in an automobile accident in October 1980. Within one year of the accident, Cherrie Lay was appointed her husband's guardian. Plaintiff provided extensive medical and rehabilitation services to Clifford. Defendant paid for some, but not all, of the services plaintiff provided. In a letter dated May 27, 1992, defendant denied payment for services plaintiff provided to Clifford on July 11, 1991, August 5, 1991, September 16, 1991, and December 31, 1991. On June 25, 1993, Cherrie Lay assigned Clifford's rights under the insurance policy to plaintiff. Plaintiff filed suit in district court on May 12, 1994, seeking to recover the balance due on plaintiff's account for the four unpaid 1991 service dates.

Defendant moved for summary disposition pursuant to MCR 2.116(C)(10), alleging that the suit was barred by the no-fault act's one-year statute of limitation, MCL 500.3145; MSA 24.13145. Plaintiff defended on the basis of the Revised Judicature Act's (RJA) insanity savings provision, MCL 600.5851; MSA 27A.5851, arguing that it tolled the one-year back provision. Plaintiff further contended that whether Clifford Lay had suffered a condition of mental derangement such that the insanity savings provision applied was a question of fact making summary disposition inappropriate. The district court granted defendant's motion and dismissed the claim. The court held that the one-year statute of limitation applied because Clifford's guardian was obligated to bring a lawsuit under the act within one year of her appointment. Plaintiff filed a motion for reconsideration, which was denied by the district court without elaboration, following a brief discussion on the record clarifying that plaintiff had, in fact, filed suit within one year of its receipt of the assignment

Plaintiff then filed a claim of appeal with the circuit court, which affirmed the dismissal of plaintiff's claim on the separate ground that no assignment of no-fault benefits is permitted under MCL 500.3143; MSA 24.13143, an argument that had been raised by defendant in its response to plaintiff's district court motion for reconsideration. The circuit court disagreed with plaintiff's argument that assignment of past- or presently-due benefits, as distinguished from future benefits, was allowed and held that the assignment to plaintiff was void as a matter of law and that dismissal of plaintiff's claim had therefore been proper.

Next, plaintiff filed an application for leave to appeal to this Court, which this Court denied for lack of merit. Plaintiff's subsequent motion for rehearing was also denied. Plaintiff then filed an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. In lieu of granting leave to appeal, the Supreme Court remanded the matter to this Court "as on leave granted for it to consider whether the circuit court's opinion that the assignment is void under MCL 500.3134; MSA 24.13143, and whether the district court's opinion that the tolling provision for insanity was inapplicable because the injured person had a guardian, are clearly erroneous."

I

On remand, plaintiff first argues that the circuit court erred in holding that an assignment of past-due no-fault benefits violates MCL 500.3143; MSA 24.13143. We agree.

This Court reviews grants of summary disposition de novo as a question of law. Smith v Globe Life Ins Co, 223 Mich App 264, 270; 565 NW2d 877 (1997). A motion for summary disposition tests the factual support for a claim to determine whether it can be resolved on an issue of law. Id. at 272. Giving the benefit of reasonable doubt to the nonmovant, the court must determine whether a record might be developed that would result in an issue upon which reasonable minds could differ. Id. All inferences are to be drawn in favor of the nonmoving party. Id. Thus, before judgment may be granted, the court must be satisfied that it is impossible for the claim asserted to be supported by the evidence at trial because of some deficiency that cannot be overcome. Id.

Statutory interpretation is a question of law also subject to de novo review on appeal. USAA Ins Co v Houston General Ins Co, 220 Mich App 386, 389; 559 NW2d 98 (1996).

The primary goal of statutory interpretation is to ascertain and give effect to the intent of the Legislature in enacting a provision. Statutory language should be construed reasonably, keeping in mind the purpose of the statute. The first criterion in determining intent is the specific language of the statute. If the statutory language is clear and unambiguous, judicial construction is neither required nor permitted, and courts must apply the statute as written. However, if reasonable minds can differ regarding the meaning of a statute, judicial construction is appropriate. [Id. at 389-390 (emphasis added; citations omitted).]

The no-fault insurance act, MCL 500.3101 et seq.; MSA 24.13101 et seq. “was offered as an innovative social and legal response to the long payment delays, inequitable payment structure, and high legal costs inherent in the tort (or ‘fault’) liability system. The goal of the no-fault insurance system was to provide victims of motor vehicle accidents assured, adequate, and prompt reparation for certain economic losses.” Shavers v Attorney General, 402 Mich 554, 578-579; 267 NW2d 72 (1978). An insurer is liable to pay personal protection benefits for accidental bodily injury arising out of the ownership, operation, maintenance or use of a motor vehicle as a motor vehicle, subject to the provisions of the no-fault act. MCL 500.3105(1); MSA 24.13105(1). The act itself further notes that statutory benefits “are payable as loss accrues,” MCL 500.3142(1); MSA 24.13142(1), and that benefits “are overdue if not paid within 30 days after an insurer receives reasonable proof of the fact and of the amount of loss sustained.” MCL 500.3142(2); MSA 24.13142(2).

The statute at issue, MCL 500.3143; MSA 24.13143, provides in full: “An agreement for assignment of a right to benefits payable in the future is void.” We believe that this statutory language is “clear and unambiguous.” USAA Ins Co, supra at 389. Under the plain language of the statute, “a right to benefits payable in the future” is distinguishable from a right to past- or presently-due benefits. Keeping in mind our duty to discern and effectuate the intent of the Legislature, we believe that if the Legislature had intended to prohibit the assignment of all rights, it would not have included the word “future” in the language of the statute. The Legislature is presumed to have intended the meaning that a statute plainly expresses. Institute in Basic Life Principles, Inc v Watersmeet Twp (After Remand), 217 Mich App 7, 12; 551 NW2d 199 (1996).

Having found that the statute serves only to ban the assignment of benefits payable in the future and not those that are past-due or presently-due, we must determine whether the assignment in question purports to assign only past- and presently-due benefits or whether it purports to assign future benefits as well. We could locate only one published opinion that interprets this provision in terms of an assignment to a medical provider, and that is the opinion cited by the circuit court in support of its dismissal of plaintiff’s claim. In Aetna Casualty & Surety Co v Starkey, 116 Mich App 640; 323 NW2d 325 (1982), the parent of an injured child assigned to a hospital no-fault insurance benefits due from an insurer. Although plaintiff argues that the assignment in Aetna was executed prior to the provision of any services and by its terms applied to future benefits, the opinion does not make this point clear. This Court described the language of the assignment as purporting to assign “any insurance benefits from Aetna which would become due and payable,” id. at 642, or as “any benefits which would become payable.” Id. at 646. By its own language, the Aetna assignment dealt with benefits that “would become” payable, and this Court held that this prior assignment of personal protection benefits to a medical provider was void under MCL 500.3143; MSA 24.13143. However, this Court did not hold that any assignment of benefits, including those past- or presently-due would be invalid.

The assignment in the present case provided for:

all of Clifford Lay's rights to be reimbursed or to have counseling services expenses paid by State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company and any other insurer or self-insurer for services provided by Professional Rehabilitation Associates in connection with injuries to Clifford Lay arising out of an automobile accident.

We find the language of the assignment somewhat ambiguous. On the one hand, the assignment states "all of Clifford Lay's rights," which connotes both past and future benefits. On the other hand, it refers to "services provided" in the past tense. To the extent that the assignment can be read as assigning future benefits, that part of the assignment is void as a matter of law. MCL 500.3143; MSA 24.13143. This holding does not abrogate the entire assignment, however. The failure of a distinct part of a contract does not void valid, severable provisions. Samuel D. Begola Services, Inc v Wild Bros, 210 Mich App 636, 641; 534 NW2d 217 (1995). The primary consideration in determining whether a contractual provision is severable is the intent of the parties. Id.

In the present case, the assignment was made only after defendant had denied coverage for four specific service dates. Moreover, plaintiff sought recovery only for the specific service dates already denied by defendant. We conclude that the parties intended to assign Clifford Lay's right to recover payment for these past-due benefits. To the extent that the parties purported to assign Clifford Lay's right to recover payment for those past service dates and therefore past- or presently-due benefits, MCL 500.3143; MSA 24.13143 does not invalidate the assignment. The circuit court therefore erred in affirming the district court's grant of summary disposition to defendant on the ground that the assignment of benefits to plaintiff was invalid.

II

Plaintiff also argues that the district court erred in holding that the insanity savings provision of MCL 600.5851; MSA 27A.5851 was inapplicable because Clifford Lay had a court-appointed guardian who was obligated to file a lawsuit under the no-fault act within one year of her assignment. We agree.

The no-fault statute of limitation, MCL 500.3145; MSA 24.13145, provides in pertinent part:

(1) An action for recovery of personal protection insurance benefits payable under this chapter for accidental bodily injury may not be commenced later than 1 year after the date of the accident causing the injury unless written notice of injury as provided herein has been given to the insurer within 1 year after the accident or unless the insurer has previously made a payment of personal protection insurance benefits for the injury. If the notice has been given or a payment has been made, the action may be commenced at any time within 1 year after the most recent allowable expense, work loss or survivor's loss has been incurred. However, the claimant may not recover benefits for any portion of the loss incurred more than 1 year before the date on which the action was commenced.

Were it not for the savings provision of the Revised Judicature Act, we would hold that plaintiff's claim was time-barred. However, the general savings provision of the Revised Judicature Act applies to all statutory causes of action created by Michigan statutes even when the statute creating the right contains its own limitation period. Rawlins v Aetna Cas & Sur Division, 92 Mich App 268, 277; 284 NW2d 782 (1979). The savings provision applies to actions for the recovery of personal protection insurance benefits under the no-fault act. Geiger v Detroit Auto Inter-Insurance Exchange, 114 Mich App 283, 290-291; 318 NW2d 833 (1982). MCL 600.5851; MSA 27A.5851 provides in pertinent part:

(1) Except as otherwise provided in subsections (7) and (8), if the person first entitled to make an entry or bring an action under this act is under 18 years of age or insane at the time the claim accrues, the person or those claiming under the person shall have 1 year after the disability is removed through death or otherwise, to make the entry or bring the action although the period of limitations has run. This section does not lessen the time provided for in section 5852.

(2) The term insane as employed in this chapter means a condition of mental derangement such as to prevent the sufferer from comprehending rights he or she is otherwise bound to know and is not dependent on whether or not the person has been judicially declared to be insane.

Defendant argues and the district court apparently agreed that the appointment of a guardian for Clifford Lay constituted removal of his disability, and that Cherrie Lay thus had the responsibility to file a lawsuit for the collection of the disallowed payments within one year of her appointment as Clifford's guardian. We disagree. In Paavola v Saint Joseph Hosp Corp, 119 Mich App 10; 325 NW2d 609 (1982), this Court held that the appointment of a guardian for a mentally incompetent person is not a removal of the disability under MCL 600.5851(1). "Periods of limitation, therefore, do not begin to run against insane persons upon such appointment." Id. at 14. The disability savings provision provides that an individual mentally incompetent at the time a cause of action accrues may file the claim before the applicable limitation period runs after the disability is removed. Calladine v Dana Corp, 679 F. Supp. 700, 702 (ED Mich 1988). The statute does not begin to run with the appointment of a guardian on behalf of a mentally incompetent person. Id.

Thus, in response to the Supreme Court's directive on remand and to plaintiff's argument on appeal, we find that the district court erred in holding that the one-year back rule barred the claim in the present case because Clifford Lay's guardian had not filed suit within one year of appointment. Whether Clifford Lay had a condition of mental derangement such that the insanity savings provision applies is a question of fact that also rendered summary disposition inappropriate and must be determined on remand to the district court.

We note that defendant appears to concede this issue on appeal and contends that if plaintiff had demonstrated to the district court that it commenced its action within one year of its assignment, the lawsuit would not have been barred by the one-year back rule. Contrary to defendant's claim that plaintiff never made the assignment a part of the district court record, we note that the assignment was attached as an exhibit to plaintiff's brief in opposition to defendant's motion for summary disposition in the district court and was thus part of the record below. Moreover, we note that an assignee stands in the shoes of the assignor and acquires the same rights as the assignor possessed. First of America Bank v Thompson, 217 Mich App 581, 587; 552 NW2d 516 (1996). Therefore, plaintiff stands in the shoes of Clifford Lay and possesses whatever right Clifford would have to collect past-due or presently-due benefits from defendant.

We find that the district court erred as a matter of law in granting summary disposition to defendant, and the circuit court erred in affirming the grant. We therefore reverse the circuit court's order affirming the district court, and remand to the district court for proceedings consistent with this opinion. We do not retain jurisdiction.
